

“Tribes, States, and Landscapes: an archaeological perspective on human-environment interactions”

October 16, 2014

Time: 3:30 pm

Strong Hall 350

Curious how humans both altered and adapted to a wide range of environments in the past?

Dr. F. Scott Worman will present the results of a landscape-scale geoarchaeological study of land use and ecological change in southern Portugal during the millennium following the fall of the Western Roman Empire.
